TEACHER'S REMARKS TO SUCCESSOR

I have followed the plan of alternation given in the course of study and combined the pupils of the seventh and eighth years into one class doing the eighth year's work. Those of the fifth and sixth years I combined upon the sixth year, and the third and fourth in the main upon the fourth year.

It will be noticed from my program, as shown above, that, with the exception of a third year number class, the school did no work in the third, fifth and seventh years of the course of study. From the list of classes for next term, as shown on the second page of my report, you will see that I organize classes in the third, fifth and seventh years for next term, thus alternating the work as provided for in the course of study.

Some time was given after most of the recitations under "Copying" and "Reviewing" for the class to take down work for the next lesson, and to assimilate the lesson just passed over. Under the head of "References" in the eighth year, pupils referred to dictionary and other sources for help on difficulties met with in preparation of lesson at home.

The above program was used for the last two months practically as it stands. During the first two months the second year pupils finished the second year number work and passed on into the third year work.

*Alternate daily recitations with sixth year class.

fact that such courses are not used systematically year by year, as they should be. It is apparent that if each year is a preparatory and necessary step to the next year above it, and only five of the eight of these years can be taken up annually, it must follow that a new class can only be organized every other year. Thus the class that enters the school as shown in the table in the years 1926, 1929, 1931 and 1933 must be abandoned. The dotted lines showing the progress of these classes through the course of study show that they do the fourth, sixth and eighth years before they do the third, fifth and seventh. Therefore, the course of study must be arranged so that these years can be alternated—one year not being a necessary preparatory step to the other, or classes can be organized only at the beginning of every other year viz: according to the table 1926, 1928, 1930, 1932, and so on.

Examinations Written tests are good for both teacher and pupil, and ought to be required of all the more advanced classes monthly; but standings, estimated either from examinations or recitations, should be given all pupils in school at the close of each school month. These should be promptly entered in the daily register and upon the pupil's report card. At the end of the term average these monthly standings, enter them in this register, and forward duplicate to the Superintendent. In many counties monthly examination questions based on the course of study are furnished through the Superintendent's office—a plan worthy of the highest commendation.

Examinations for graduation should be conducted by the Superintendent, or under his direction. He will furnish questions covering the whole common school course. This makes the requirements uniform throughout the county. The central examination and the "rank in class" examinations, as held in some states, have proved exceedingly beneficial in revealing the character of instruction the pupil has been receiving and fitting him for the final examination.

Graduation and Diplomas Pupils passing the Superintendent's examination satisfactorily are entitled to graduate and receive a common school diploma, issued by the County Superintendent.

The graduating exercises may be held in the schoolhouse, or two or more schools may unite and hold their exercises together at some central point. The Superintendent will attend these exercises and award the diplomas. The graduating exercises may be made of great value to the school population of the district. It brings new interest and enthusiasm into the school, and the pupils are absent and tardy less, and they work more faithfully for the honor of graduating from their home school.
